Johnson, Matt /Arranged by John D. Wattson

Publisher Desc. The sweet waitress didn't MEAN to drop the large tray of food. According to Johnson's website, he was the "house pianist" at a well-known hotel in Boston for 12 years, where he played popular tunes and original music. One fateful evening, a very sweet waitress named, Irene—who should have retired years earlier—dropped a large tray of food. The entire restaurant came to an awkward, silent halt after all the noise settled. Johnson immediately began playing (creating) this upbeat piece to distract and calm the clientele. The melody sang the dining room's collective empathic thoughts, "she didn't mean to."
